

NEUTEALITYA- Our neighbor of the Republican has again misjudged us. In advocating the principles of what he terms "the proclamation of Mr. Webster," we are not aware that we deviated in the least from our neutral position-for we cannot perceive that the restricting public officers from improper interference in elections will, benefit any party. This measure is but a repetition of that adopted by Mr. Jefferson, and which then received the sanction of the American people; and was approved by General Jackson on his becoming president. Having invariably sustained the principles of this "proclamation" through all the changes of parties, we cannot see any particular reason why we should renounce them at the present moment. We do tional provision on the subject of the existing difconsider it "a great national measure" to compel public officers to perform their duties, instead of attempting to dictate to the people in political concerns.
