INUMBER 43,

For the Baltimore Clipper. ADDRESS TO THE DEITY.

Father of all and everiasting God! First cause omnipotent, immutable, Thou who didst speak, and at thy first command Creation from chaotic night stood forth: Help me, Oh, God! to strike the string to thee, And bend the knee in homage to thy throne, While nature, the' inanimate, proclaims. And speaks with bursting eloquence a God! Shall man, thy noblest work, regard thee not? Great God, forbid, touch ev'ry tongue with praise Till pole to pole re-echo with thy name. Is man so blinded as to see thee not? Creation is an index to thy throne: In all things I behold thine awful name, And hear thy voice in ev'ry moving sound. I view my hand, I see thy name thereon, I see it stamped on all that strikes my sight; I hear thy voice in the soft murmuring stream, I hear it in the cataract's deep roar, I hear it in the songster's melting strains, And hear it in the thunder's deaf'ning sound. Oh, God! when thus I contemplate on thee And view thy might, thy majesty set forth, Oh, what is man? I tremble at the thought, And into nothing, less than nothing sink. Thou who dost sit Great Governor of all, Darkness thy footstool and thy throne the skies, Thunders like slumbering harmless at thy feet, And lightnings rest upon thine awful brow: Thou who dost scan Creation with a glance, And at whose nod earth to her centre shakes; Thy voice shakes the dismal depths of hell, And devils tremble at thine awful frown; Thy presence spreads immensity throughout, Still thou canst dwell within the human heart. Thine arm outstretched supports the universe; Those pond'rous orbs are balanced on thy hand; You blazing sun is midnight in thy sight; Drive headlong down, and into atoms crush. Thou rid'st in grandeur on the raging storms, While flaming lightnings gild thy cloudy car, And rolling thunders bellow at thy feet, Archangels stand astonished at thy might, And in deep rev'rence cast their sunlike crowns Down at thy feet, wake up their harps to thee, And at thy glory hide behind their wings. Art thou a monarch whose exalted throne
