

For the Baltimore Clipper.

THE BEAUTIES OF MAY.

Sweet May, gentle May, is again drawing near,
And spreading its beauties around,
And Aurora's gay smile on thy flowers appear,
To kiss all the gems that are found.

The brooks of the valley now open their streams,
And softly thy murmur away,
While Heaven's pearly mirror adorns with its beams,
The blossoms of flowery May.

The fields and the meadows—O, sweet is the scene!
To the eye as it wanders along,
And birds seem to welcome their mantle of green,
With notes of their warbling song.

The pure and fairly, that emblem of Spring,
Adorns the Earth's emerald face,
And yields up its fragrance to nature's high king,
The sweets of its insatiate race.

The dew drop of Heaven looks sweet on its lips,
When morn's rosy colours appear,
And brightly it shines till the warbler sings,
The last of the sparkling tear.

The spangles of Heaven seem shining more bright,
When nature's gay works are discerned,
And landscapes of beauty more dear to the sight,
For Spring, lovely Spring has returned.

Baltimore, May 1841. W. L. G.

THE ENGLISH SEAMAN IN CHINA.

LOVE MAKING IN CHINA. I was poking about the deserted town the day after we were assigned to our several locations, when, in a street any thing but a principal one, and at a window of a house any thing but an inferior one, I saw, or thought I saw, a pair of eyes peeping from over a screen, and a pair of hands resting upon the top thereof. The house had its gable end to the street in which I was, and the window was the first round the corner. I caught the vision as I passed. I returned and returned, and the eyes and hands were still there. Somehow or other I concluded that they belonged to a female; but it was clearly possible they might not, it would have been unsatisfactory to go away wondering. I therefore looked over my shoulder, and, no one being in sight, I very quietly slipped round to the door, and not thinking it necessary to wait till it was opened, (I had no very distinct idea how I was to express my wish on the subject, for there was neither knock nor bell.) I applied my shoulder decisively to it, and it yielded to the persuasion. I had hardly got inside the threshold, when the eyes and hands I had seen made their appearance, in company with the rest of the proprietor, the whole figure in a state of evident trepidation. I believe you know I do not speak Chinese, so I made no attempt to explain myself by words. I dropped on my knees, and would have kissed the young lady's foot, but she drew back, and I therefore kissed the ground two or three times, after which I placed myself on one knee, and concluding that Chinese have hearts as well as other people, and, probably, in the same place, I pressed mine with intense earnestness, and looked—I am not exactly sure how I looked, but I soon saw that a woman is a woman all over the world, for her little eyes sparkled, and her little hands put back a little veil that was worked in gold thread, and her little feet pattered towards me a step or two; I cannot say my goddess walked, and altogether she appeared as much impressed with my appearance as a modest man could reasonably expect. I never was so surprised in my life at the ease with which I reassured her, for, between ourselves, I expected, being of China, the precious porcelain would break to pieces from very fright. I had only knelt two or three minutes, struck my left side three or four gentle slaps, and clasped my hands, just, by the by, as you squeeze a lemon, when I saw I was any thing but a monster in her eyes. I would have given all possible promotion and prize money just to have been able to say a word or two in Chinese, but it was out of the question. I had therefore but one resource; I spoke English to her, and told her, of course, she had nothing to fear, that no one living should harm her, and that I considered she was a celestial of the first water, and no mistake, left for the express purpose of striking into dazzled bewilderment with her radiant beauty the wit-out savages. All this, I have no doubt, she fully comprehended. In return, she told me, in Chinese, that all her family had fled in terror, she supposed, for that, on coming home late one evening from a tea party, she found the house empty; she was preparing to follow, and had got nearly out of the western gate, when her heart failed her at the sight of some of our men, and she returned. She added, that there was not a soul in the house but herself, and that she had been very frightened, but she was not frightened any longer. Have you ever seen La Luette di Poetica? Of course you have. Very well, then you know how I got all this. The house was a very neat affair, indeed it looked like a large toy; there were five or six apartments leading from one another, and upstairs, not exactly what we mean by upstairs, but yet above the others, (the ascent was little more than a gentle plane,) as many more. My little friend refreshed me with a luscious liquor, which she gave me in a small glass globe, covered with filagree work, and standing on a carved ivory stem, in shape not unlike our modern champagne glasses. I think it must have been decidedly intoxicating in its effects, for, though I took but two glasses, I felt an all-overness very soon after. I might have gone to sleep, but the curiosity of my fair hostess kept me awake; and, finding that I was a very harmless thing to play with, she pulled me about almost as much as if I had been one of their own puzzles. I think I remained nearly two hours with her, ransacking, in a quiet way, every thing in the house, which she allowed me to do, seeing the pleasure the novelty gave me. This whole affair appeared to me when I returned home like a dream. If women all over the world are not riddles, what are they? The girl made me understand as perfectly as if she had been brought up in the finishing academy near London, that I was not to tell a soul of her existence. She showed me provisions, dried fruits, and cakes, and wines, that would last her ten years; and, seeing that I understood I was to be mum, which I made her do by pretending to sew my lips together, at which she laughed heartily and clapped her hands, she invited me to call again, to which I said yes, by slipping behind a screen, springing forward, and seizing her foot, which, this time, she did not withdraw, but rather allowed me to examine, and I can confidently say it was more like a small bag of walnuts than any thing else. I intend to keep my promise, and if I am not "found out," I don't think she will be, while things stand as they do at present. I have hardly time to add that I am, "my dear yours, very sincerely,"—Extract of a letter from Chusan.

THE GAMBLER JUSTLY PUNISHED.

From the Italian.

BY W. J. SUCKMISTER.

A certain person being one night in Paglia, happened to meet three companions at an inn.—Two were from Pistoia, the third from Prato. After supper they began to play. In a short time one of the Pistoians losing what he had staked, was left without a farthing; he began to fret, curse and blaspheme frightfully; thus raving he went to sleep.

The other two, having played some time, thought they would play a trick upon the one that had gone to bed. Perceiving that he was asleep, they put out all the lights and covered up the fire: then they began to talk loudly and make a great noise, pretending to dispute about the game—one saying "you have taken away my lower card." The other denied it, saying "you have given me a like, with so much din that the one who was sleeping awoke, thinking they were playing and talking as if they saw the cards. Not seeing any light in the room he said "what the deuce will you gain by bawling all night!" Again he lay down as if to sleep.

The two companions gave him no answer, but went on in the same way, so that the third being more awakened began to wonder within himself; and seeing neither fire nor light, although they were playing and disputing, he said "how can you see the cards without any light?" One of the two replied "you must have lost your sight together with your money. Do you not see the two candles we have here?" The one in bed rose on his arm and almost angry said, "Either am I drunk and blind, or you tell lies." The others went groping to the bed, pretending to believe he was making game of them; but he still replied: "I say I do not see you."

At last the two pretended to be greatly surprised; and one said to the other, "Alas! it seems to me that he speaks truly; give me that candle and let us see if his sight is not destroyed."—The poor fellow thought he had certainly become blind; and weeping bitterly, said, "Oh! my friends, I am blind." He immediately began to call upon "our Lady of Loretto," and pray her to pardon the oaths and maledictions he had uttered after losing his money.

His friends comforted him, saying "it is not possible that you do not see us; it is a fancy you have taken into your head." "Oh! dear," replied the other, "it is no fancy; I do not see you any more than if I never had eyes in my head."—You have, however, clear sight," resumed the two as they rapt to each other. "See, how well he opens his eyes—how clear they are. Who would believe that he cannot see?"

The poor fellow wept all the while and prayed for mercy. At last they said to him, "Make a vow to go to 'our Lady of Loretto,' devoutly, barefoot and uncovered: for this is the best remedy we can have; and we, meanwhile, will go to Acqua Pudente or to some neighboring place to look for a physician; we will not fail you in any thing possible." The poor fellow knelt down in the bed, and with many tears and bitter repentance for having blasphemed, made a solemn vow to go to 'our Lady of Loretto' and offer her a pair of silver eyes—not to eat meat on Wednesday, nor eggs on Friday—and to fast on bread and water every Saturday, in honor of our Lady, if she would grant him the favor of restoring his sight.

The two companions entering another room, lighted a candle and came back with great laughter into the presence of him they had frightened. As you may suppose, however, though free from so great a misfortune, he was so much astounded by what had passed, that he could neither laugh nor speak. The companions did nothing but provoke him, saying he was bound to pay all these vows because he had obtained the favor.

We extract the following lamentable tale of depravity from the Gazette des Tribunaux:—"About six months ago a lady named Iroy, living in the Rue Lavoisier, lost a suit at law, whereby she was deprived of the greatest part of her fortune. She, however, still continued to keep up the same establishment, and made no diminution in her expenditure. She was 33 years of age, and had two daughters, the eldest of whom is 17, and has left school with an accomplished education. The youngest, Mlle. Claire, has scarcely attained her 13th year, and is still at a first-rate school in the Rue de Clichy. About 10 in the evening of the 21st inst. Mme. Iroy and her two daughters entered the shop of M. Aubree, watchmaker, at No. 134 Rue Saint Honore, desiring to be shown some high-priced watches, the mother wishing to make a present of one to each of the young ladies. The customers were presented with chairs—the mother took her seat at a rather remote part of the shop, while the two sisters drew close to the counter. They were very difficult to please, and occupied a long time in discussing the beauties and merits of the various watches presented to their choice—with the mother occasionally, but rarely, interfering with her advice and opinion. While the discussion was going on, the door was opened, and entered, a watchmaker in the Rue Dauphine, and, with much agitation, exclaimed to the ladies: "You did not take so much time in robbing me." Mme. Iroy and her daughters were for a moment astounded, and demanded an explanation; but, in a moment afterwards, Mlle. Claire, the youngest, suffered to drop from her snuff a watch she had attempted to conceal. Scarcely had this incident occurred, when the shopman of Mme. Baillet, another watchmaker in the Rue de l'Anceuvre Comedie, entered, and accused the three ladies of having committed a similar theft in her shop the preceding evening. These accumulated charges could not be overlooked, and Mme. Iroy and her two unhappy children were forthwith conducted before the commissary of police of the quarter. Here the mother and eldest daughter made a firm denial of any participation in the crimes imputing to them, but Claire, the youngest, confessed them, protesting that she alone was guilty. The magistrate, doubting the truth of this avowal, ordered the mother and eldest sister to be taken into another room, and by his father interrogatories elicited from the poor deluded child that, for three months past, she and her sister, at the instigation of their mother, had committed repeated robberies in watchmakers' and jewellers' shops, and that in securing herself alone she had obeyed the injunctions of her mother, who assured her that no harm would come to her, as she was under the age of discernment. The mother, on being called in, and hearing a repetition of the declarations of her child, confessed that they were true, but attempted to exculpate herself on the ground of mental alienation caused by the distress created by what she called the unjust decree which deprived her of her property. On her residence being certified a box was found containing a large quantity of stolen jewelry, besides numerous tickets for pledges made at Mont-de-Piete. Mme. Iroy and her eldest daughter have been committed to the Prefecture of Police, and the youngest was sent back to the school, in the Rue de Clichy there to be detained till called forward as a witness against her mother and sister.

THE U. S. BANK. We learn that the papers are now in preparation, with regard to the Trusteeship that have been determined upon by this institution. One of these is intended to secure the city banks that hold $5,000,000 in post notes—the other is designed for the benefit of the circulation and depositors. Real estate, stocks, &c. will be placed in the hands of the Trustees; and we may presume that the circulation and deposits will be paid as speedily as possible.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

§ The circulation of the U. S. Bank at the present time, is estimated at $2,700,000. The money deposits in the Bank in this city are under $300,000. The Directors are making every effort in their power, to effect an arrangement, to enable them to liquidate both these claims at the earliest moment possible.—Id.

§ The following lately appeared in the New Bedford Register as an advertisement. Friend "R." certainly has a quaint, queer way of doing business, and "Robert" had better look out for breakers:

Robert I tell thee again, if that dollar is not paid this week, which thou borrowed to pay for posting thy wife, I will tell the two first letters of thy name next week, and it may appear that it was the man that ought to have been posted, and not the woman.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN. It is said that loaded teams were crossing Lake Champlain at Plattsburgh on Friday last. There are three feet of snow only ten or twelve miles west of the Lake. The farmers are nearly all out of hay, and their cattle are in a starving condition.

FRESHER. The Connecticut has been greatly swollen by the late rains. Yesterday the water came to a stand, being nearly into Commerce-st., and filling all the cellars on the east side of said street.—Hartford Courant.

ARREST OF A MURDERER. Willis G. Carroll, the supposed murderer of the Rev. Mr. Lindsey, near Hendersonville in Sumner county a few days since, has been arrested in the Indian Territory, west of Arkansas.

FORGER ARRESTED. Robert Cragin, a lad of 19, on Monday drew from the Shoe and Leathers' Bank, at Boston, $241 on a forged check, in the name of Grant, Daniell & Co. He was, however, secured.

§ The New York Times says: "One of the men engaged in the recent great forgeries, it is said, has a small defect or blemish in one of his eyes.

The New York Express says that the quantity of produce that has been received in that city this season by land, will no doubt be greater than in any former year.

The Stockholders of the U. S. Bank are to hold another meeting on the 4th of May.

§ A fire broke out in Harrisburg, Pa. on the 25th ult. which consumed the stable of Mr. J. Greenawalt; several adjoining frame buildings were also destroyed.
