MONSIEUR TONSON.

There liv'd, as same reports, in days of yore, At least some fifty years ago, or more, A pleasant wight on town, yelep'd Tom King, [A fellow that was clever at a joke, Expert in all the arts to teaze and smoke,

To many a jovial club this King was known, With whom his active wit unrivall'd shone-Choice spirit, grave free-mason, buck and blood Would crowd, his stories and bon mots to hear, And none a disappointment e'er could fear, His humor flow'd in such a copious flood.

To him a frolic was a high delight— A frolic he would hunt for day and night. Careless how prudence on the sport might frown; If e'er a pleasant mischief sprang to view, At once o'er hedge and ditch away he flew, Nor left the game, till he had run it down.

One night, our hero, rambling with a friend Near sam'd St. Giles', chanc'd his course to bend "My poor old Frenchman, I suppose, is dead-Just by that spot, the Seven Dials height; "Twas silence all around, and clear the coast, The watch, as usual, dozing on their post, And scarce a lamp display'd a twinkling light.

Straight at the door he gave a thund'ring knock, The time, we may suppose, near two o'clock. "I'll ask," says King, "if Thompson lodges here." "Thompson!" cries t'other, "who the devil's he?" "I know not," King replied, "but want to see What kind of animal will now appear."

After some time, a little Frenchman came, The other held a thing they call culotte; An old strip'd woollen night-cap grac'd his head, A tatter'd waistcoat o'er one shoulder spread, Scarce half awake, he heav'd a yawning note.

And soon address'd our wag in accents mild, Bending his head politely to his knee-"Pray, sare, vat you vant, dat you come so late, I begyour pardon, sare, to make you wait; Pray tell me, sare, vat your commands vid me?"

As by your house I chanced to-night to go-But, really, I disturbed your sleep I fearleay, I thought that you perhaps could tell, Among the folks who in this street may dwell, If there's a Mr. Thompson lodges here?"

The damsel then began, in doleful state. The Frenchman's broken sincipers to relate. And begg'd he'd call at proper time of day; King told her she must fetch her master down, A chase was ready, he was leaving town. But first had much of deep concern to say.

Thus urged, she went the snoring man to call. And long indeed was she obliged to bawl, Ure she could rouse the torpid lump of elay: At last he wakes—he rises—and he swears, But scarcely had he totter'd down the stairs. When King attacks him in his usual way.

In short, our hero, with the same intent, In short, for strokes of humor quite the thing. | Full many a night to plague the Frenchman went So fond of mischief was the wicked wit; They threw out water—for the watch they call, But King expecting, still escapes from all,

It happened that our wag, about this time, On some fair prospect sought the eastern clime, Six lingering years were this his tedious lot; At length, content, amid his rip'aing store, He treads again on Britain's happy shore, And his long absence is at once forgot.

To London, with impatient hope, he flies, And the same night, as former freaks arise, "Ah! here's the scene of frequent mirth," he said, Egad, I'll knock, and see who holds the place."

With rapid strokes he makes the mansion roar, And while he eager eyes the op'ning door, Lo! who obeys the knocker's rattling peal? Why e'en our little Frenchman! strange to say, He took his old abode that very day!— Capricious turn of sportive fortune's wheel!
