From Graham's Ladies' and Centlemen's Magazine. THE HAUNTED CASTLE.

A LEGEND OF THE RHINE. On the brow of a lofty and rugged hill, which overlooks the Rhine, stand the ruins of the ancient Castle of Ehlendorf. The ivy has clambered over its crumbling towers, as if to shield them from the destructive hand of time, and bind with its creeping tendrils the wounds which mirth of the young and gay, of brave knights and ladies fair, while the songs of the minstrels, and of night, until the purple light of dawn appeared. possessors has become extinct; and the ivy grows, and the owl hoots amid its deserted courts.

At the time when our tale commences, it was in the possession of Conrad, Baron of Ehlendorf, brother had died in Palestine, leaving to him the of Aldenburg, and never was a purer gem more dearly valued than the young bride of Ehlendorf mother's arms, he felt that without her his treasures were but glittering dust.
