I thought, as a mark of love for thee, I'd choose a gift-but what shall it be? A jewel to deck thy glossy bair? Or a gem on that artless breast to wear? They'd dazzle awhile, but as time would fly, And fashious change, thou wouldst throw them by, And the giver would then forgotten be! They are not the gifts I will choose for thee. I thought me then of the varied store That knowledge pens—of the ancient lore— Of by-gone years—but thy youthful eye Would pass these graver matters by-And the fairy tales and the lighter themes That glow in the bard's inspired dreams-The beautiful annual with gilded leaves, The splendid gift that love receives, Would be read but once, and seldom again Would giver or gift be remembered then! And I'd wish in thy gentle dreams to dwell, Nor forgotten be when I bid farewell; For thy lovely form and thy sweeter face Have found in my heart an abiding place, And I love the girl who with gentle sway Could be led where science points the way; Then what shall the rare memento be, That will lead thee still to think of me? Of the many gifts before me thrown, My judgment and heart selected one-Tis a Holy Book, to the pious given, Whose precepts teach the way to Heav'n: And I thought as her 'custom'd path was trod, When the Sabbath dawns, to the House of God, t That Julia would think, as with pious look She conn'd the leaves of her Prayer Book, That I, who lov'd her as few will love, Would lead her thoughts to things above, And would wish, as she bow'd on bended knee To pray for others, she would think of me.

> For the Saltimore Clipper. THE SEMI-VIRI.

There is a large class of young men in this goodly city of Baltimore, to whom the above name may be said to belong. They are half men ble. in every sense of the word, having neither put on any of that manliness of bearing or dignity of h character which belongs to their age and sex, nor put off that passion for trifles which is the characteristic of childhood. They are a step beneath stantinople. the genus "loafer," inasmuch as they are not | only genteel vagabonds, but pretenders to the dignity of "leaders of the ton," which they certainly are, in one of its meanings, as they serve no useful purpose under the sun, except it be as walking signs for tailors and barbers to show off the fashions upon, in the shape of long bair, corsets, "close frocks" and "shad-bellies." And, though the reflecting portion of the ton are far from respecting them for this reason, there are large numbers of young ladies and gentlemen been very much prospered. The whole number who are easily led by the sounding title of "gentlemen of fashion," to look upon all their peccadillos as excusable foibles.

The class who may be properly designated as to no business at all, or if they have any, neglect | to attend to it, and devote to visiting and walking that time which sensible men employ in the of- is 56 tice or counting room. Hence the absurd fashion of ceremonious morning calls, during business hours, while the evenings, when both ladies and gentlemen are at leisure for social intercourse, low oyster callars. Hence the groups of swaggering, lounging fops, who are to be seen at the corners of the streets, passing judgment upon the ladies, and poking their ebony canes in the way | of passers by. From this class too proceed the year. Mantalinis, the Titmire and the Counts des | .Whirkerandos, who, with strut of conscious importance, may be seen on Sundays parading up | and down the streets leading to the fashionable churches, staring impudently into the faces of those ladies they meet, and dancing attendance upon all who have the reputation of being heirciers. Without any idea of making their way hear plan is to humbug some wealthy lady into | their real characters, when necessary. The world | Banks. is, in their epinion, made for them, and not they ! for it; and they live to cut, instead of cuting to ever ready to resort to the duelling code.

This may seem rather a highly wrought picture; but those who have never mingled with such persons, except in the parlor, can have but year. little idea of their real character; though, for the henor of people's discernment, be it said, that they are seldom long known without being ridicaled by the more sensible ones. Nevertheless, months there have been deposited $110,987, a people tolerate such characters, and it becomes sum equal to the deposites of the five previous the fashion to invite them in order to make up a party. This should not be-they should be expelled, like drones from a bive.
