From the New Orleans Picayune, DUST TO DUST. Dust to dust! the tolling bell Peals the mournful "Fare thee well!" Dust to dust! the solemn drum Warns again of time to come. Dust to dust! the good and brave, Great and lowly, lord and slave, Wrinkled age with silver hair, Youth and strength and beauty rare, Both the venal and the just, Own the doom of Dust to Dust!

Pass the solemn pageant by, Who shall be the next to die? Who shall read his neighbor's face, And the mystic dooming trace? He of firmest heart and limb. Death may soonest call for him, While the victim lingering ill, Breathes the air of Heaven still, While there's life there's hope and trust, Till the hour of Dust to Dust!

Honored ashes, noble clay, Mingle with the dust to day. Drooping round the sable arn, See a mighty nation mourn. Glorious in memory's breath, Now the soldier sleeps in death. In the earth he loved to plough, Lowly dwells the farmer now. Lifted by the nation's trust, Falls the Ruler, Dust to Dust!

Dust to dust! The story's told, O'er the dust the stone is roll'd, And where darts the spirit then, That must fill the thoughts of men. Dust to dust! what power may save, Mortal dust from earthly grave? Dust to dust! the chant of doom, While we hasten to the tomb. Man is feeble, God is just, Requiescat! Dust to Dust!
