FOR THUS WHO HAVE FRIENDS IN "THE PRESIDENT." [From the Liverpool Standard.]

Come the not? The thip was wont to glide With bird like speed adiwart the ocean-foam. Floats not her thig upon the distant tide? Gicam not her white sails through the grey mist's ] glocu:

In husbed susperse, weeks heavily pass o'er: She comes not yet—alas! if the should come no more! How many hearts with sick misgiving faint, Worn with long watching, pine in lone distress, Whose terre, held prisoned by love's foed restraint, Gush forth uschecked in midnight's silentness, As to their wistful gaze hope's trembling ray Grows dim and dimmer yet—is fading fast away! Oh! Lord of sovereign might! before thy throne

They fall, imploring thy protecting power! O God of truth and lave! to thee alove They turn for strength in this their trial bour, How deep, how keen their anguish, only Thou, Who knowest all, can tell: support, sustain them now.

Thou know'st the shrinking agony of fear, That mo:ks the smiles the lip assumes in vain; Affection's art would hide the stealing tear, With words of hope disown its writhing pain; But Tnov behold'et the spirit's deep de mair, When in its solitude it pours its wild, impassioned

Alas! their homes are devolate! Some face Befored hith vanished from the social hearth-Bome form that charmed it with familiar grace-Some tones that gladdened it with music mirth;

O Lord of might! pity their helpless pain, Bring back their wanderers safely to their arms again. Our times are in thy hand; in perfect rest Thou will keep him whose mind is stayed on thee: Calm thou the conflict in each testured breast;

Their hope, their trust, their coprolation be-Shed thy deep peace upon each care-worn brow: Be with them, God of love! strengthen, sustain them
