"Monsieur, Monsieur," said she. At the same time, on a given signal, the footman leapt down, opened the carriage door, and invited Frederick | to enter. He did so, though with some hesitation and surprise, and the carriage started off at full speed. "I have received your note, sir," said the lady to M. de la Tour, in a very soft and sweet voice; "and spite of your refusal, I hope yet to see you to-morrow evening at my party."

"To see me, madame!" cried Frederick. "Yes, sir, you-----Ah! a thousand pardons," continued she, with an air of confusion; "I see my mistake. Forgive me, sir; you are so much like a particular friend of mine! What can you think of me! Yet the resemblance is so striking, ! that it would have deceived any one."

Of course, Frederick replied politely to these apologies. Just as they were terminated the carriage stopped at the door of a splendid mansion, and the young man could do no less than offer his arm to Lady Melton, as the fair stranger announced herself to be.
