WORLD'S CORRESPONDENT. If there is such a thing, at any time in the changeful aspects of the war, as "giving aid age comfort to the enemy," by mirchievous and false statements, it is certainly notably illustrated in the correspondence from this city, of that traitorous sheet-the New York World. We had occasion not long ago to call attention to this correspondence. There mouth," it is possible to imagine. is a cool complacency in accrediting the rebels with overwhelming numbers, really wondrous to all who have the slightest knowledge of the real facts in the case; and the tendency of these statements, so far as they can be made use of to alarm the timid, and encourage disloyalty, is mischievous in the extreme And whilst the loyal press here gets intimations from the military authorities, cautioning it not to publish anything calculated to weaken public confidence, or enlighten the enemy, statements in this particular case are tolerated, until the wonder rises to smarement at the inconsistency of those whose duty it is to deal with such cases; whose duty it is to deal with treason in all its ug shapes. And now to illustrate our meaning.

We have but recently had sundry alarms in this region at the prospect-partially realized-of another rebel invasion. The reality was bad enough; the fears awakened amongst our people cruel enough, without any falsehood and exaggeration to make the matter worse. But what do we see? Let our readers note the following "piling up of the agony"--no other phrase meets the case-of the veracious correspondent of the N. Y. World .-Think of such an one assuming the part of virtuous indignation because his loyalty and truthfulness is questioned! We quote from his letter dated "Baltimore, July 30th:"

STRENGTH OF THE INVADING COLUMN. If there accounts are correct, it makes the Confederate force now on the line of the Potomac as follows: Early's Division of Ewell's Corps....12,000 men. Breckingidge's Division 12,000 men. Caralry under Ransom, Imboden and Moseby 10,000 men. Two Divisions from A. P. Hill's Two Divisions from Longstreet's One hundred and fitty pieces of ar-

THE CAMPAIGN DIRECTED BY GEN. LPE. This campaign is directed by Gen. Lee, and will, if my information is correct, be led by him in person. Nay, it is said that he has already passed through Richmond, and is now on his way to the front. The object of the campaign I have alluded to in former letters. It is to effect an entire revolution the manner of carrying on the war; to remove its terrors and desolating effects from | woon the skin. OBJECT OF THE CAMPAIGN. The object of this campaign is to threaten Harrisburg, l'hiladelphia and perhaps, Baltimore and Washington, in such streng force that the Government will be reduced to the alternative either of abandoning the siege of Richmond, and bringing Grant's army home to defend our own cities, or else of seeing the cities that I have named fall successively beneath the attacks of the disciplined soldiers! of the South. That is the first great object of the campaign. Now we leave it to our readers, and to those | providing for preserving, beautifying and strength. whose duty it is to deal with such mischievous | saing the human hair. This justly celebrated canards in these exciting times, what judgment should be pronounced upon these de-lionable ladies who have been traveling in Eu liberate exaggerations, these statements better calculated than aught else in the same line, to bolster up a fallen cause by weakening the hands of loyal men.
