GEN. A. J. SMITH'S COMMAND. Public attention has been so absorbed in watching the main combinations on the military chees-board as to overlook a minor movement which now gives promise of a substantial | ter, George B. Rigge, E. M. Greenway, Jr., op-operation with the general plan for checkmating the enemy. We refer to A. J. Smith's Edward B. Dallam, Joshua A. Dryden, Ed- Pec.

It will be remembered that this able officer, who surprised and captured Fort De Russy, on the Red River, and saved the day at Pleasant Hill, La., was ordered to Memphis. after Sturgis' unfortunate expedition against Forrest. He immediately reorganized the command, adding an entire fresh division of troops from Vicksburg, and starting out anew after the Rebel butcher, gave him a severe! thrashing.

Returning to Memphis, he fitted cut a formidable secret expedition, numbering nearly thirty thousand men, and so quietly took his departure that the first intimation of his absence was conveyed in the rebel telegram announcing that the Yankee Smith was playing havee in the vicinity of Helly Springs. Heed in the meantime had withdrawn to his rescue the greater portion of the rebel troops in that department commanded by S. D. Lee, so that Smith met with but little resistance. Forrest remained with a small command, but not out of the wer of his antagonist in quick time, and being lets in the rear, suddenly dashed into thouteicula. Memphis on Sunday work
