[For the Baltimore Clipper ] THE FALL OF ATLANTA. A VERY MOURNFUL BALLAD.

The Cotton King rides up and down. Through the country—through the town. From Corpus Christi's gates to those Of fair Savannah, on he goes,-Woe is me, Atlanta!

Letters to the mourch tell How the beleaguered city fell; For days and weeks they fought amain, For days and weeks they fought in vain,-Wor is me, Atlanta! And when that day began to dawn, And the proud foe came rushing on, And legions in their long array, Opened in wrath the dreadful iray, Wee is me. Atlanta!

The trumpet then gave out a sound, Like notes sepuichrat from the ground, And da ker grew the dismal sky, On that sad day of destiny. Wee is me, Atlanta! The monarch wrutg his hands and cried,

Oh! that ere this I could have died, For heaven has crossed my every plan, Since the first hour the war began. Woe is me, Atlanta!

Out then spake old Asinros. His flowing beard as white as show: "Good King thou art justly served, "Good King thy rate is well deserved. Woe is me, Atlanta ! "It's Heaven's chastisement and wee betide

"Thy false ambition and thy pride,

"That couldst not brook to see on all. "Alike, the dews of Heaven fall. Woe is me, Atlanta! "Behold, oh King! and mark it well. "Thy crime o-ce rose in meaven and fell.

"Fell down to depths of dark despair-"To grope and groan forever there. Woe is me, Atlanta "And now what glory hast thou won?

"1 hy kingdom ruined and thyself undone." "Dotard avaunt!" the monarch yelled. And to the earth the sage he relied, Woe is me, Atlanta! Unhappy king what bast thou done?

To slay in wrath the only one, Of . li thy leige-men-whose faithful heart. Disdeined to act the flatt'rers part, Woe is me, Atlanta!

But ah! thy wealth can ne'er restore Thy realm to what it was of yore, Nor baing to life the myriads slain, Nor soothe the hearts now wrung with pain Wee is me, Atlanta! The Cotton King rides up and down,

Through the country, through the town,
