GENERAL CUILER'S REMARKS. Mr. President-Accept my thanks for the very cordial reception I have met here this evening. It always gives me pleasure to meet good, true and loyal men, and especially now and here, where my ears have beard other sounds than the voice of patriotism and loyalty. Sir, I have heard more complaining, more repining and more disloyal teik in one day since I came North-ies, in one hourthan I have beard in the army in three years Why is it? It is because we have traiters North as well Bouth, and they desire to make their treachery felt in the coming elections, to got porsession of the Government again. It would be impertinent in me to tell you. and these gentlemen what they should do, or i how they should conduct the coming campaign.

But, Mr. President, the efforts to embarrass the operations of the army and the Government, to misrepresent the cause of the struggle, are to constant, persistent, and wicked, that I cannot forbear urging upon you the necessity of constantly keeping the true issues be ore the public mind. That sort of playing out is no doub wery more able to them. I am asked how these nominations and the platform will suit the army? It is unquestionably true that General McClellan has great personal popularity in the army, but in my judgment no man is so pure or so popular as to get the vote of the soldiers with such a ristform. The men composing the army are intelligent; they are brave; they are not traitors. They went out there to fight for trendom in its broadest sense; to crush ou the rebellion. Do you think there men wil consent, after three years' fighting, to lay down their arms and ask the pardon of Jell Davis 7. Will they for, at the groads of their fellow comrades ? I do not believe it.

Will they vote for the cowardly policy of any temporary expedient which shall shift the trouble from us to another generation? It is an insult to expect it. The army want coace, but they want a peace that shall be ling time. Of late, a system has been indulged horogenic-13 listing as time-one which in by many of conductors of (leafing) as they shall preclude the possibility of another rebellionitte this. They know that there but one may to have guch a peace, that is by compelling those in reballion to lay down their arms and ask for it. If you expect those who have fought your battles, who know what war is, to support a platform which is b) satisfactory to the rebels, which cheered in their camps, you have underesti mated their patriotism and love of liberty.
