IS MARYLAND IN THE COMING ELECTION ASSURED TO THE CAUSE OF THE UNION.

We know not how others regard the coming election in Maryland for President, but to our view there is a degree of apathy on the part of our friends which would be alarming, if the result depended upon the vote of Maryland alone. The simple fact that our State has given the New Constitution by the most popular method for the occasion, should induce every patriot in the State to the most extraordinary efforts for the few days left to us. We have no right to expect other states to do all; and the mere fact that matters seem secure, affords us no excuse for not doing our best to rouse up a handsome majority for the two great champions of the Union cause. We must remember that the signs yet rest upon us of having allowed Maryland in the last Presidential election to go for the Slaveholding traitor—Breckinridge—and the administration tried enough, surely, that we may either bear a good name again by having the State go for McClellan, unless we instantly better ourselves, and summon every loyal voter to do his uttermost.

There is nothing pleasant in suggesting these unpalatable and plain truths, but they are truth, nevertheless. No one before the recent election had any serious concern that the New Constitution would be endangered. It has been, and yet, after the experience of this narrow escape from a defeat, which would have set the State back in its progress for years, and which would have been a mortification to the friends of progress everywhere, hardly to be estimated, who now sees any commensurate exertion of the loyal voters of the State to prevent a repetition of the alarm and danger to our great cause?

We repeat it—what right have those upon other States the labor in this attempt to defeat traitors, which should properly be shared by ourselves? And more especially when we remember that if there is a State in the Union which owes a boundless debt of gratitude to Mr. Lincoln it is our own. From the first he stood by us as a public guardian, and, favored us peculiarly in every possible manner. In the hour of deadly peril to Maryland, and when besieged by traitors in the national capital, he was more considerate of our safety than of his own; and took all methods to save us from disturbance and blundering, by preventing to divide between the national forces on their way to Washington and our people, which in the then dangerous condition of public sentiment, might have resulted in laying the commercial metropolis in ashes.

And now when we remember all this, when we know that he deserves every manifestation of gratitude we can give him, are we to stand off in apathetic indifference and allow others to vindicate his character and policy; shall we permit others to render the verdict?

"Well done," whilst our State remains silent, or worse, pronounces against him?

Let it be noted, that no loyal man harbors the ability of our side to give a hand to the majority for the Union cause—for Mr. Lincoln as the chief representative of it. But no one can deny, either, that not one half of the electors is making to that that should be made, to organize our forces, to inspire them with spirit for the great occasion, to convince them that much depends on their election. It would save the honor of the state. And we tell the University of Maryland, that we stand ready to tell them—that unless they arouse themselves, unless they exhibit an awakening of which we cannot see the evidence now, it may be that their mortifying lot to find their State—a State still looking with approval on the infamous rebellion—still apparently stretching its hands toward Richmond for that long ago promised "deliverance."

And if this could be the case—it would be general rejoicing over the reelection of Mr. Lincoln and the triumph of that noble cause for which so much precious blood has been shed, so much treasure sacrificed—we are compelled to hang our heads in grief that our State has failed in its duty, would not the event be fit to be mourned over for years, could anything hardly compensate us for such a disappointment?

We know that at present, few or none have experienced such a humiliating result. But then, let us not forget that the State has just given evidence of the preeminent hero of men, surely determined not to give up the struggle for the cause allied to slavery; that they have recently shown a strength and a vigor worthy of a better cause. Say what we may, as to what is doing to defeat three men, the Unionists are not doing now all they ought to do. We have members, the last President and the next, to be elected. Who will bring up the cause? If not the Unionists, and the disunionists as well, which keeps the city awake or were present in the election as a noisy, futile demonstration calculated to impress voters to do their duty? Even with all this to impress the defenders of the Union we are not compelled to remember that the traitor Breckinridge carried Maryland by a plurality vote of 700, and is the case any more prevailing to day, in view of what has just happened?

Again—we are to remember our duty to Mr. Swann and the other gentlemen nominated along with him, as the representatives of the University of the State. Let us ask, whether it is just to name these gentlemen as the champions of the Union cause, and then tax them to fight their own battles, mainly, should we not make superhuman exertions to elect them, to secure Maryland on the right side for the next gubernatorial term? We know that appointments have been made for them and other distinguished speakers and them over the State, so far as we are speaking concerned, that much is being done; but we insist again that little effort, comparatively, is making to procure audience; that at time when the State and the city would be all alive after the old fashion with light and daily popular demonstrations, our community is silent and dead as it would be in an agricultural fair, or anything else of like kind which used to come in more peaceful times to stir the community for a little while with trifling excitement.

In conclusion—we have to say that we hope the concluding results in the elections may not justify the fears we have expressed. That they are reasonably, in view of what has lately happened, must—we should think—be admitted. Not entirely given to despondency in such cases, ourselves, but always disposed where it is possible to take a cheerful and hopeful view of the situation, we yet insist upon the practice of guarding against all contingencies, of leaving nothing to chance to secure the triumph of our cause in the State. That the great States north and west of us will do their duty so far as we are concerned, they have given the best assurance. But it is noted and remembered, that they cannot fight our battles, cannot vindicate our good name for jurisdiction, for devotion to the Union. A brief period remains to us to perfect our organization, to get into line as we are in the great battle about to come off. It is not possible for all to measureably devote the time left, to extract labor for the most glorious cause that ever appealed to the hearts of men. Should not the next exertion be made to raise the amount, and I will mail a box of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit on other persons' marks—25 cent, or less, and $1.00 per box or less.

The Horrors of War can be greatly mitigated by that sovereign remedy, BOLLOVAY'S OINTMENT, as it will cure any wound, however desperate. If it be well rubbed around, the water will not penetrate, and the flesh will grow over it. A pot of ointment should be in every man's knapsack. If the reader of this "News" cannot get a box of BOLLOVAY from the drug store in his town, he can get it at the lowest price at the Maryland Institute Fair, Oct. 31, 7th Street. Price 50¢ with directions.
