OUR ADVERTISING AGENT.

An advertising agent for the city is Captain William Gibson, who will, as he finds opportunity, call upon the old patrons of the Clipper, and to whom any favors in the advertising line will be forwarded. Our patrons will find him entirely reliable.

THE IMPACT OF TRAITORS INTO CIVIL WAR.

There are various evidences daily given, both in this city and in the State at large, to show that the patience of loyal citizens is well nigh exhausted, so far as tolerating treason and its sympathizers is concerned; and if the demonstration is made to them of the rebellion, the feeling is much more plainly developed. We need hardly, we presume, specify the causes which have precipitated this feeling, since with a little reflection they are known to all; but in view of these manifestations certain persons do not learn discretion, and rapidly too, why, the worse for them, when an outraged public sentiment comes to take cognizance of their acts in the premises, at such a time as the times it is to do.

Let it be remembered, further, that their turning rebels deliberately cast in their lot and fortunes with the rebel Confederacy, in the beginning of their own free will; indeed, with the most eager expectation of dragging the whole State after them. They followed Marshal Kane and ex-Governor Lowe and their colleagues to Richmond, with a resolution, that showed no greater than their expectations, how they determined they were to overthrow both the State and Federal Governments. And they were loud in their denunciations of all who would not follow them into the rebel Confederacy; they made it a merit to insult all who differed with them. For four years they manifested in wholesale murdering upon people, in the destruction of our railroads, in doing everything to render themselves and practices as hateful as possible to the rest of the people constituting a loyal State. Indeed, thus a most unenviable and, indeed, dreadful notoriety, it is plain that they, in their folly, could never have looked for a restoration and triumph of Union, and so took little heed to the ultimate consequences of their acts.

Well, the illusion is gone forever with which they flattered themselves, and the cold and startling reality comes upon them—that they have somehow made a terrible mistake. The Union forces have scattered their allies to the winds, have annihilated the rebel "Confederacy," and the chief betrayers of the Southern people are at last put to flight, to escape that justice they wish well to avoid. And now with their hopes and wishes all wrecked, thrown precisely adrift by the tremendous events at Richmond, certain of the original revolutionists here, are coming to the conclusion that they had better make a serious study of their position, and that they should be content to remain in the State—as the events of the past few days prove—who are not disposed to wait for the Government to rebuke them; who, despite everything, are determined not to be contented for the rest of their lives by those who have persisted in doing them all the injury possible. And we may deprecate violence, summarize measures as much as we choose, but the excitement in regard to these things will be kept up, probably, so long as the cause of the rebellion and anger continues. If men are unwise enough to force everything that is obnoxious—that they know to be such—upon communities mourning anew the cowardly atrocity of the rebellion, why they must themselves look to the consequences; they are not to be surprised if they are made to suffer.

And already those returned traitors have found their error to some extent; and have their sympathizers abroad, and if the Government would not have them dealt with irregularly, it must do its duty to the full. Giving such conditions to men with arms in their hands, as turns them out to go where they choose, no matter what may have been their crimes, and the
