WE WANT PEACE -A VITAL QUES- one too, who, if he had been committed to TION FOR THE CITY AND STATE | wrong opinions—of which we know little TO COSSIDER.

The time has arrived when the people of Maryland, and especially of Baltimore, are to seriously consider what is right and proper in dealing with old issues, and when they should determine upon that final policy towards those who have sym pathized with the rebellion, in the new aspect affairs present at this time. We certain persons in the community may propose to deal plainly with our readers seek even to ostracize us. Whilst we in this regard, because circumstances have should like the good opinion of all, we do arisen in which to consult further our not intend to sacrifice the right for the mere resentments, is to pursue a course sake of it. The war is over, and this very near suicidal to the most vital inter- city, of all others, cannot and should not ests of the city and State. We want im- consent to foster animosity, to perpetuate migrants hither; we want new enterprise anger and discontent. It is enough that and labor and business to replace that the disloyal here are thoroughly beaten, which has been lost; and if we allow our let a manly course now be adopted to inresentments to control us unduly, we may sure to us peace. have cause to regret it for many a long year, in the fact, that the stagnation of THE PATE OF THE REBEL LEADbusiness caused by the war may be perpetunted.

And in what we have to say on this subject, we do not propose to consult the politicians particularly, but we intend to appeal directly to the people; to that great and contention, and who do not desire merely a cessation of fighting, but who want veritable peace; who must and will have a restoration of quiet, of law and

Now, it is all well enough to hate treason, and to detest that politic "sympathy" with it, which has kept this community in a condition of feverish excitement an anger for four years past; but, after all there must be a limit to all things, and we suffer ourselves to be carried by our anger, by a desire to be thought more patriotic than our neighbors, beyond all bounds of Christian and even manly forbearance, when shall we have that peace, that repose from public disturbance which is the right of all who have been made to suffer so heavily? We cannot live in storm ferever.

Now there are several classes here who demand our forbearance. And the first we shall name—the women. We know they are impulsive, warm in their sympathies, prone to be led off in the way many of them have been by admiration for cer tain specimens of false heroism. It has been the case with the sex since the work was created. Foremost in every thing almost that appeals to the feelings, it has been their province always to construct wreaths; to embroider flags; to urge forward their devotees in any case where they consider the honor of their friends involved. And if numbers of them have been misled, if they have not seen the true tendencies of a conflict which in thousands of instances has puzzled wiser ! and cooler heads of the other sex, both at home and abroad, let us not, unless we would shame our natures as men, pursue those of the weaker sex with an implacable anger which will not be satisfied. To do this to an extreme, now that the war is ended, would be neither like Christians or gentlemen. They are humbled, mortified

-let them rest. The next class we shall mention, are the deluded youths, who with no discernment of the end from the beginning, started out in pursuit of "glory," impelled, in a vast number of instances, to the role they undertook by the influence of the weaker sex aforesaid. We have called them the "weaker sex," almost since Eve fooled Adam out of Paradise; but he is a poor reasoner upon the influences which shape human events, which mould the destinies of nations, who is not ready to acknowledge the influence women must exert on all the affairs of life.
