THE MARTYR'S RETURN.

BY MISS ISABELLA MacLEOD, of Washington.
"Four years ago, Illinois! we took from thee and from America the people of our country—We return it to thee and to thy countrymen—Not thus may any but the nation's heroes—Never—Give them resting place, oh ye prisoners! Make room for the ashes of the noblest men of all time!"—As W. W. Bechtler.

He is coming home!

Oh, prairie-land, his own land of the West! Open plains and rolling prairies, boundless fields, and rolling hills above his place of birth.

Four years amid the stormy fight.

Then gave him the star-crossed.

Not then did the winds and waves in peace subside him.

He didn't give up, though.

And, with the dawn, the eastern sky is bright.

He comes, he comes! his life's great labor done.

As for the friends and foes who loved him,

Oh,勇敢的人民! wherefore should you?

Is not this his home, his victory won?

God's years have added lustre to his name.

With the strength of a lion's power,

All the world by his power, named by him?

Or, still purer light the blanched life,

The heart of man than woman's tenderness,

So ready to help, and the sternest strife?

So here he comes, amidst the sternest strife!

Father, Jim faced in High, so strong and high,

Sadly patient through the stormy road.

Then said his son, "I am a hero."

And, as the clouds beyond the sky!

Our mighty West! we give him back to thee!

Death crowded and gloomy! On! on! on!

The sturdy sons of the West! to see,

One of these three bleeding heads to see,

In vain! As through the mists,

In sunless state, the grand process on awry,

We'll see him, our friend, our hero, no more,

And we'll lose his guiding voice and hand.

To other men, and other days be left,

The noble heart that won a nation's love,

And, passing, leaves unspared and bare!

For us—where tears fall like the summer rain,

Be the last to weep, we never weep,

"OUR MURDERED DEAD SHALL NOT HAVELED IN VAIN."

W. W. BECHTLER, May 3, 1865.

AN ENCOUNTER WITH A TIGER.

A correspondent of the Dasco News, a journal published in the heart of India, gives the following account of an encounter with a tiger:

Mr. Sarker, some years ago one of the keenest sportsmen in India, he has at some time past given up entirely all kinds of field-sports. He came to Dacca a few days ago to witness the races and being desirous, before returning to Calcutta to visit the scenes of his former exploits, to see if his hand had not lost its cunning, he obtained the loan of several elephants from Khajeh Abdoel Gunny, and Tuesday last proceeded with a couple of friends towards Dacca, on reaching the jungle he heard a roar, indicating the passage of a tiger; he and his party, who had whispered the ominous word "Loy."

A veteran sportsman would not go out tiger shooting without a gun, but he has no gun or, as it may be danger, depends on the firmness or timidity of the animal. The animal ridden by Sarker was offered him from among several others, which found the horse indicated with a snort, and paid, ran away, and adapted for tiger-shooting. This elephant was urged on, the others forming a line. They had not proceeded far when the tiger, rushing out of its cover, assailed one of the party elephants. Mr. Sarker, with a view to shot the tiger from the elephant, fired a shot at his lashed-up master.

No sooner was the gun discharged than the tiger charged upon Mr. Sarker's elephant, and lacerated her ear, causing a rent in the forehead. The elephant, thus immensely stirred, roared, and retreated in fear and alarm to say, the tiger dogged her heels for about a hundred yards, biting and clawing them all the while. The elephant, maddened with pain and rage, ran into the bushes, and clenching the iron tail of the howdah, and the double gun pistol, and continued to fire until the tiger was urged on, the others forming a line. They had not proceeded far when the tiger, rushing out of its cover, assailed one of the party elephants. Mr. Sarker, with a view to shot the tiger from the elephant, fired a shot at his lashed-up master.
