

DAILY CLIPPER.

W. WALTERS, Publisher.

THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1865.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

FOR THE
DAILY CLIPPER.

TWENTY-ONE-HALF CENTS PER WEEK, PAYABLE TO THE CARRIERS.

Mailed to Subscribers out of the city at

$2.00 FOR ONE YEAR.

1.00 FOR SIX MONTHS.

1.00 FOR THREE MONTHS.

1.00 FOR ONE MONTH.

ALTERNATIVELY IN ADVANCE.

25¢ ADVANTISER.

The following exhibit of our regular rates will be found of service:

1 Square 1 Time..... $ .25

1 Square 3 Times..... 1.00

1 Week..... 1.00

1 Month..... 10.00

1 Year..... 30.00

ONE SQUARE CONTAINS EIGHT LINES OF SPACE.

THE CLIPPER IN FREDERICK, Min. Citizens of Frederick and vicinity will be promptly served by leaving their names at the news depot and variety store of David F. Smith, our only agent in Frederick.

OUR ADVERTISING AGENT. Our advertising agent for the city is Captain William Gibson, who will, as he finds opportunity, call upon the old patrons of the Clipper, and to whom any favors in the advertising line can be handed. Our patrons will find him entirely reliable.

THE CALM THAT HAS SUCKED THE STORM. The quiet that is upon the country at present, after the tremendous conflict of the past four years, is really remarkable; and not the less so, since with the cessation of fighting, there was for a brief space, a strong disposition manifested to plunge anew into the fierce political excitement. To lose no time with the announcement that peace had come, various political leaders began to put forth their programmes; to marshal their forces, and to make preparations to decide—in advance—the question of the next Presidency without delaying. Hardly to give President Johnson a hearing. And denly the stir ceased; the demagogues were disengaged; the football they were preparing themselves to kick vigorously hither and yon has either collapsed, or it has disappeared in some corner, and now these gentlemen stand with folded arms, apparently lost in conjectures as to what will happen next; for not to have something happen to keep them before the public, is the last calamity. What can be the cause of all this?

The country wants this peace, this calm—there is no doubt of that. Worn out with fighting and fierce controversies, never was known a case where a little repose could be of deeper and more lasting benefit, to lead the wounded inflicted by civil war. And so it is, that the people left to themselves, would have quiet, that rest absolutely needed to them if they are to repair the injuries inflicted upon the country, upon its lines of communication, and its trade and commerce. In this temper did the acrimonious endeavors of demagogues of comparatively little avail in drawing the people away from their peaceful pursuits. Feeling that the great conflict between the sections, growing out of slavery, is settled, they are very much disposed to leave minor matters to settle themselves.

And now let us indulge a conjecture or two as to the main cause of the calm referred to. That there was a determined endeavor not long since, to vitalize and sundry old matters of controversy so as to make them of moment again in the political arena, was marked of all. That gorgon—"State Rights"—was making vigorous endeavor only a brief period since to thrust itself again to the front; to do what it could to work us more woe, if not in a conflict of arms, at least of the forum. What has produced this quiet we ask?

It is not the eminent wise master in which President Johnson has met all these matters of controversy, and by one comprehensive decision kindly expressed, that there is felt to be making it easy to restore old quiet from them. Well aware that Mexican matters—as they are progressing—will settle themselves, that he has no occasion at present to bring on a foreign war by giving a push to the French puppet now trying to balance himself on the tottering throne of Mexico, he sees with his accustomed sagacity that the "Mexican question," the "Monroe doctrine," will not suffer by the delay, because so long as this Government refuses to formally acknowledge the new order of things inaugurated for this continent by Louis Napoleon, so long are we in a position to vindicate the traditional policy of the Republic, choosing for ourselves the most fitting time to do it.

All this, we say, means peace, quiet, the leisure to repair the evils we have suffered, the losses we have sustained—

"making haste slowly," is the true policy; and when we find the President—notwithstanding his natural impetuosity and force of character—subordinating everything to what is best fitted for the needs of the occasion, we have the assurance that everything will at last be settled on a solid basis, that peace in this wise, both at home and abroad, will mean peace for a long period.

And we find that already this is getting to be well understood—is getting to be felt. Our public securities show it, the active efforts to recruit old lines of communication, to establish new commercial relationships show it. More at peace today than we were even ten years ago, because we have at last sounded the depths of possible disturbances, the country appears stolidly to defy the efforts of any to convince it that there is occasion for new excitements.

Finally, if all see this as they ought, it is the conviction of the people at large that they have had excitements enough, trouble enough, let it be their business to frown away new troublous down. The matters to which all should now address themselves with the greatest earnestness, are the bringing back of the country to ancient harmony, its trade, its prosperity. We have a President with a term of almost four years to serve, we have everything on that basis which promises stability, security, a good future. In the power, then, of the people to aid the President in commanding repose, let all address themselves to the needed work of reconciliation, of reorganization. Blessed with everything essential to restoration; with resources sufficient, well employed to put the whole country speedily beyond the reach of suffering, let it be the business of all to hurry up those useful exchanges, let trade, intercommunication, stand in the place of political harangues with all who wish well to their country.

GOVERNOR RANDALL'S ADDRESS. The address of Governor Randall on the 4th at the Park, is spoken of by those who had the pleasure of hearing it, in the highest terms, as an able and patriotic effort, giving an admirable exposition of the causes of our troubles as a nationality, and the remedies for them. Favored with a large and appreciative audience, he was cheered to the very echo, as he reviewed in a graphic and eloquent manner the steps by which the nation had been plunged into a civil war, and the brave struggle by which it had finally vindicated its integrity. But for the proceedings at Gettysburg which engrossed so much attention, a full report might have been had of the ovation at the Park. It is said that our citizens have the privilege of listening to an effort so worthy of their careful consideration, as entertainment, and at the same time so instructive.

HARSDEN'S EXPRESS.—We are again indebted to the enterprise and kindly attention of Harsdens' Express for late Richmond and other Southern papers, for which weeter our earnest thanks.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT CINCINNATI. General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of Cincinnati on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

Cincinnatians, Citizens of Cincinnati.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me. I am sorry to tell you that my father died here in this city when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning. I am sorry to tell you that General Grant and myself met over a year since; and in that very room we laid down the maps and studied out the plan which ended the Civil War.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT CHICAGO. General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of Chicago on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

Chicagoans, Citizens of Chicago.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT BOSTON. General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of Boston on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

Bostonians, Citizens of Boston.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT PHILADELPHIA.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of Philadelphia on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

Philadelphians, Citizens of Philadelphia.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT BALTIMORE.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of Baltimore on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

Baltimoreans, Citizens of Baltimore.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW ORLEANS.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New Orleans on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Orleanians, Citizens of New Orleans.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy, running about in Lancaster, stealing his cherries. [Laughter.] I know my heart, and can tell its feelings better than I can express them. But I will do my best to make you understand my meaning.

GENERAL SHERMAN AT NEW YORK.

General Sherman was enthusiastically received by the citizens of New York on Friday evening of last week. There was an address of welcome, a reply, a reception and a serenade. The following are the General's remarks:

New Yorkers, Citizens of New York.—As I am not so accustomed to public speaking as my old friend, Mr. Stansbury, who has just addressed me in your behalf, you must bear with me.

My father died here in this city, when I was a little red headed boy