as earnest that we are to be re-enclosed in the efforts to be made in all directions to repair the damage resulting from the late conflict. This very manifestation of his, is one that is to infuse new vitality into the national credit, Turkish the people with new incentives to do all that is possible to pay off the national debt. If men have of late hesitated somewhat in their half proposed enterprises at developing the hidden wealth of the country, if they have been a trifle uncertain lest the labor they might organize for digging gold, or iron, or silver or gold, might be diverted for a Quixotic fight to repeat almost tottering royal support, they will now hesitate no longer; and with the prospect of a long and glorious reign of peace, of that first great blessing which includes almost all others, there must be such national greatness and national happiness as the world never witnessed. Let us again thank the President for a boon so desirable and so welcome.

A GIANT—A stranger, apparently from the country, and of an appearance that is almost grotesque, was seen at the street corner of the street between the street and the street. He measured seven feet two inches in height, and weighed one hundred and thirty pounds. He had a long nose, a large mouth, and a pair of eyes that were as blue as the sky. He was dressed in a blue coat and a pair of blue trousers. He was seen at the street corner of the street between the street and the street.
